Women in prison

1977
Prisoners of Conscience Year

amnesty international
Two years ago, during International Woman's Year, Amnesty International issued a list of 252 women imprisoned in 25 countries. The list was by no means exhaustive, since it included only those cases which had been taken up for adoption or investigation by AI - a mere fraction of the thousands of women imprisoned throughout the world on account of their religious or political beliefs, or their ethnic origin. Many of those on the list had not been charged or tried. Some had been tortured.

In publishing the list, Al did not seek to argue that the prisoners named in it were imprisoned or restricted because they were women. Rather, the size of the list indicated the growing extent of women's participation in the political process, and their active concern at the political, social and economic conditions in their own societies. Yet the fact that they were women was directly relevant to their suffering, making them especially vulnerable to the torture and maltreatment inflicted alike on male and female prisoners, and giving a particular significance to the enforced separation from children and family suffered by all political prisoners.

The 1975 list was symbolic of Al's work on behalf of women prisoners of conscience. Since its publication Al has continued to take up on a massive scale the cases of women imprisoned in violation of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. In addition to women who have been political activists, the organization has helped other prisoners of conscience who have concerned themselves directly with women's rights, either through political action, as in Spain, or through education and welfare programs designed to improve the status of women within their own society, as in Indonesia.

Third category of women prisoners are those detained not as a result of their own activities, but because their husbands or close relatives are sought by the police. These prisoners are in some instances held hostages after their case had received some publicity that she received medical attention.

Luisa Segura has been held without charge or trial for over two years under the State of Siege legislation, which provides for an indefinite period of detention. In October 1975, she applied to leave the country under Article 23 of the Constitution, which states that a citizen detained without trial may apply to "opt for exile". This right was suspended in March 1976 by the military government. However, The Supreme Court of Justice has recently ruled that the "option for exile" may apply in certain cases. Luisa Segura is now under consideration. Luisa Segura was adopted by Amnesty International in June 1975.

Nasreen has been an AI Prisoner of Conscience since 1971. AI appeals to the Tanzanian authorities have been countered by the claim that she is 'happily married'. This is contradicted by reports that she suffers from depression and pleads to be reunited with her family in Iran. Marriage without the formal and free consent of either intending spouse contravenes Islamic law, Tanzanian law, Swahili customary law and article 16(2) of the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Luisa Segura - Argentina

Luisa Segura is a member of the youth wing of the Partido Socialista de los Trabajadores (Socialist Workers Party - PST), a non-violent left wing political party. She was arrested in November 1974 together with a number of other student leaders.

Conditions at Villa Devoto prison where she is presently held have led to a steady deterioration in Luisa Segura's health; it was only

Nasreen has been under virtual house arrest since then, forbidden for long periods to communicate with relatives or friends. She suffered reprisals when three of the young women escaped to Iran in 1973. She refuses to accept the 'marriage' and has frequently complained of the cruelty of her 'husband', Ali Fourn.

Nasreen Mohamed Hussein

In 1970, Nasreen, a schoolgirl of 14 years, was abducted from her parents by soldiers and forcibly married to a Zanzibar security official. She and 5 other girls, like her, of Arab-Persian ancestry, became the forced brides of members and associates of the ruling Zanzibar Revolutionary Council.

Nasreen has been under virtual house arrest since then, forbidden for long periods to communicate against the voluntary surrender of their male relatives. Finally, there are the rare cases of women who are restricted or detained because they are women; here the example of Nasreen Mohamed Hussein of Zanzibar illustrates the tragedy of forced marriage used as a political weapon.

The suffering of women political prisoners, like that of their male counterparts, sheds light on varying systems of repression. In Africa, women have suffered long-term detention without trial in countries as diverse as Mali, Malawi and Ethiopia — in the last case the imprisoned women include both members of the former royal family overthrown by the armed forces in 1974, and suspected left-wingers. In South Africa, women nationalists such as Winnie Mandela (whose husband is serving a life sentence for political offences) have been subjected to detention or restricted to virtual house arrest under “banning” orders.

Oskana Popovych was arrested in November 1974 and charged with “Anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda”. She was accused of distributing samizdat and subsequently sentenced to 8 years in a corrective labour colony followed by 5 years exile.

At the time of her arrest, she was convalescing from an unsuccessful operation and was awaiting another. She could only move about on crutches. Ms Popovych is now serving her sentence in a corrective labour colony south of Moscow. It is reported that she is subjected to poor diet, inadequate medical care, and physical labour. Oskana Popovych was adopted as a prisoner of conscience by Al in May, 1975.
The states' treatment of female political prisoners in the Middle East and Europe has exhibited similar brutalities. Reza Baraheni, the exiled Iranian poet has testified to the brutalities inflicted on women torture victims in his country, while in the USSR, Nataliya Gorbaneyevskaya is only one of a number of women prisoners of conscience who have been wrongly detained in psychiatric hospitals. In Spain, former Al-adoptees, like the feminist lawyer Lida Falcon have begun publishing information about the special problems faced by women political prisoners.

During the POC Year Al seeks the active support of women everywhere on behalf of their imprisoned sisters throughout the world.

Numerous Latin American women are amongst those who have suffered imprisonment and often brutal torture at the hands of repressive regimes. In some countries (for instance in Chile in the months and years following the September 1973 coup) the torture inflicted on women prisoners has frequently taken the form of sexual brutality administered by male interrogators. Women from all walks of life are amongst those persons who have "disappeared" after kidnapping by parapolic "death squads" in Argentina, Brazil, Chile and Guatemala.

In Asia, Al's work for women prisoners has concentrated on Indonesia, the country with the largest known number of women political prisoners, where more than 2,000 women have been detained without trial, many of them for over eleven years. Prior to the change of government in South Vietnam in 1975, many women, who were sometimes imprisoned with their children, were among the Vietnamese prisoners of conscience adopted by Al.

Ms Siti Suraith - Indonesia
Ms Siti Suraith continued to work as a trained nurse after her marriage to a leading member of the Indonesian Communist Party. She was known to have little interest in politics, and she did not join any political organization. After October 1965, when there was an attempted coup, for which the authorities held the Indonesian Communist Party responsible, she was dismissed from employment as head nurse in the maternity ward at Central Army Hospital.

Her husband was in hiding at the time, and she was continually harassed. A year later, she was arrested. Her relatives were unable to take care of her four children, and she was compelled to take three of them with her to the detention camp, where they stayed for several months.

When she was transferred to Bukit Duri Women's Prison in Jakarta, she was not allowed to have her children with her. Later the children were taken into care by their aunt.

In 1971, she was transferred to Plantungan Women's Detention Camp in central Java. She is 48 years old.

These cases have been chosen by Amnesty International to illustrate the plight of women in prison. As of 15 February 1977 these are all active cases. Should they be released during POC Year facts of their detention and imprisonment nonetheless remain relevant.
against the voluntary submission of women and their relatives. Finally, there is the case of women who are restricted because they are women. The arrest of Nasreen Mohamed Husse in Egypt illustrates the tragedy that women can be used as a political weapon.

The suffering of women in prison is only a shadow of that of their male counterparts. In South Africa, women have suffered detention without trial in regimes as diverse as Mali, Malawi and Zaire. In the last case, the imprisonment of both members of the foundation's committee, overthrown by the army, and suspected left-wing women nationalists (whose husband is serving a sentence for political offences) have come under severe detention or restrictions. In the case of arrest under "banning,"

The illustration of a woman in a cage represents the confinement and the suffering of women who are detained without trial.

After her case had received some publicity, she received much attention.
What you or your women's organization can do to support P.O.C Year.

1. Join Amnesty International and encourage other women to do the same.

2. Subscribe to AI publications to be kept informed of Human Rights violations around the world.

3. Join the AI Urgent Action network and send telegrams in cases of extreme urgency.

4. Join the Prisoner of the Month scheme and send cards to selected cases of prisoners in need of help.

5. Organise special meetings of women around the theme "women in prison".

6. Sign the Petition on the reverse side which AI is presenting to the United Nations and the world's governments.

7. Organize special collections for POC Year at appropriate times of the year.

Petition for the release of Prisoners of Conscience

"We, the undersigned,

OUTRAGED that in many parts of the world, men and women who have neither used nor advocated violence suffer imprisonment solely because of their political or religious beliefs, their race colour, or language;

this, despite the many humane and noble declarations of the assembled nations of the world, beginning with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights three decades ago,

URGE the General Assembly of the United Nations to take swift and concrete steps to ensure strict observance in all countries of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and urge each and every government in the world to act for the immediate release of all prisoners of conscience."

The Year 1977 has been declared Prisoners of Conscience Year. In a coordinated campaign, the groups and members of Amnesty International will seek to intensify public awareness and concern about violations of human rights wherever they occur and to bring greater support to prisoners of conscience throughout the world. Special contributions are being made by outstanding figures in the world of art, film, music, literature and design. Signatures will be collected in all countries for a petition urging: 1) the General Assembly of the United Nations "to take swift and concrete steps to ensure strict observance of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights," and 2) urging all governments "to act for the immediate release of all prisoners of conscience."

Funds raised during this special year will be administered under the authority of the International Executive Committee of Amnesty International and will be devoted to the strengthening of the national programs and structures of the Amnesty International movement and for capital expenditure within the International Secretariat.

During Prisoner of Conscience Year Amnesty International will be producing lists of prisoners who are adoption or investigation cases in the following categories. These lists do not include all prisoners of conscience in the relevant category.
